From the Inside Flap

A New Continent of Investment Opportunities

Africa has become the birthplace of more new stock markets than any other part of the world and home to the world's top performing stock markets during the last five years. It also has the least expensive stock prices in the world. Now, two experts on African investment show you how and why to invest in this ultimate emerging market by sharing the dynamic, investor-friendly Africa they know, while debunking common misconceptions and offering investors the opportunity to tap into the exciting potential of this vast continent. Here is a realistic view of steadily evolving post-colonial, post-Cold War, post-apartheid Africa, reflected in strengthened ties with the United States and a growing list of U.S. investors including such corporations as Microsoft, Cisco Systems, and Dell, as well as financial institutions such as Chase Manhattan Bank, J.P. Morgan, and Merrill Lynch. Unprecedented changes in the socioeconomic makeup of Africa have led to a rapidly developing "corporate Africa," with its own versions of Wall Street. Tourism is on the rise, and the globalizing powers of the Internet have had a tremendous impact on the investing climate of a country in which seventy percent of the population is under age thirty. This forward-looking generation will play catalytic roles in their nations' economies. Investing in Africa illuminates the mechanics, resources, and risks of pursuing foreign direct investment and portfolio investment in Africa by providing a complete, insider's view of the markets. For those who utilize this information, Africa offers an incredible investment opportunity.
